 Excerpt from The State of the Blessed Dead Death from the mere moralist's point of View, as the termination of human schemes and hopes, we Christians have nothing to do. We are' believers in and servants of One who has in these senses abolished Death. Our schemes and hopes are not terminated by Death. But reach onward into a state beyond it. Again, with that state beyond, except as one of blessedness purchased for us by the Son of God, I am not at present dealing. It is of those that die in the Lord alone that I speak. And this being so, it is clear that the first point about them demanding our attention, is, the very commencement of their state at the moment of death. And this will form our subject to-day. Discussion of the Doctrine of the State of the Dead and Punishment of the Wicked Library of Alexandria

'Passing' is a common euphemism for the death of a person, as he or she is said to 'pass away' or 'pass on'. This open-ended saying has at its heart a notion of transformation from one state to another, which in turn grants the possibility of grasping or approximating the passage of time and the materiality of death and decay. This book begins with the idea that since all material things - whether animals, human beings, objects or buildings - undergo some form of passing, then the specific transformation in these passages and the materiality actively given to it can offer us a grasp of otherwise precarious temporalities. It examines how human beings strive to relate to the temporal dimension of death and decay, by giving new shape and direction to being and by examining its natural transformations. Focusing on the materiality of passing, and thereby the relationship between embodiment, temporality and death, Materialities of Passing offers rich case studies from Europe, Papua New Guinea, South Africa and the Russian Far East for exploring the material, spatial and directional aspects of the very interface between life and death. As such, it will appeal to scholars of anthropology, death studies, archaeology, philosophy and cultural studies.

Excerpt from Dead-Sea Fruit, Vol. 2 of 3: A Novel On these leisure days Eustace made good progress with his own studies. He cherished the ideas of the ancients as to the requirements of a poet, and thought that whatever was learnt by Virgil should be at least attempted by every student who would fain sacrifice at the shrine of the Muses. On dull days he was wont to spend the morning in his own room, working his hardest: but in fine weather he preferred a solitary ramble in the park, or on the banks of the river, with his own thoughts and a volume of classic prose or poetry for company. He set out for a day's ramble, one fine, sharp morning in December, at the same hour in which a gentleman arrived at Windsor by the morning express from town. A Debate on the State of the Dead Between Rev. Thomas P. Connelly and Nathaniel Field Createspace Independent Publishing Platform

Gradually the mind awakes to the mystery of life. Excepting only the first pair, every adult member of the human race has come up through the helplessness of infancy and the limited acquirements of childhood. All have reached their full capacity to think and do, only by the slow development of their mental and physical powers. Without either counsel or co-operation of our own, we find ourselves on the plane of human existence, subject to all the conditions of the race, and hastening forward to its destiny, whatever it may be. A retinue of mysterious inquiries throng our steps. Whence came this order of things? Who ordained this arrangement? For what purpose are we here? What is our nature? What are our obligations? And whither are we bound? Life, what a mystery! Having commenced, will it ever end? Once we did not exist; are we destined to that condition again? Death we see everywhere around us. Its victims are silent, cold, and still. They give no outward evidence of retaining any of those faculties, mental, emotional, or physical, which distinguished them when living. Is death the end of all these? And is death the extinction of the race? These are questions which have ever excited in the human mind an intensity of thought, and a strength of feeling, which no other subjects can produce. To these questions, so well-defined, so definite in their demands, and of such all-absorbing interest, where shall we look for an answer? Have we any means within our reach by which to solve these problems? We look abroad upon the earth and admire its multiplied forms of life and beauty; we mark the revolving seasons and the uniform and beneficent operations of nature; we look to the heavenly bodies and behold their glory, and the regularity of their mighty motions--do these answer our questions? They tell us something, but not all. They tell us of the great Creator and upholder of all things; for, as the apostle says, "The invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead." They tell us upon whom our existence depends and to whom we are amenable. But this only intensifies our anxiety a thousand fold. For now we want to know upon what conditions his favor is suspended. What must we do to meet his requirements? How may we secure his approbation? He surely is a being who will reward virtue and punish sin. Sometime our deeds must be compared with his requirements, and sentence be rendered in accordance therewith. How will this affect our future existence? Deriving it from him, does he suspend its continuance on our obedience? or has he made us self-existent beings, so that we must live forever, if not in his favor, then the conscious recipients of his wrath?

The State of the Impenitent Dead Forgotten Books

Altered States addresses the two greatest challenges of human consciousness: death and holiness. The questions are: What happens when you die? and What is holy? These two concerns drive culture and civilization, and shape all human experience, personal and communal. History and literature bear testimony to this conscious preoccupation. Yet, one must ask, Is there any consensus on the subject of death and the holy? Is there anything that can be called "truth?" Altered States offers surprising answers. The text comprises two major essays, "The State of the Dead," and "The State of the Holy." Dr. Yeagley has provided a wide scope of research for each, and the essays inevitably involve elements of philosophy, anthropology, archeology, sociology, psychology, literature, and of course, religion.

In Paradise Forgotten Books

Excerpt from In Paradise; Or the State of the Faithful Dead: A Study From Scripture on Death and After-Death IN the exercise Of that sweetest Office Of the Christian priesthood, the ministry Of sympathy and consolation to the suffering, there are found in every parish these classes (1) Many Christian people who, in Spite Of the depth Of their trust and the sincerity Of their penitence, do yet tremble at the great mystery Of death; (2) Others who, for themselves and for their loved ones gone before, have not yet caught the clear horoscope of that future life, as drawn in the teaching of Christ and in the testimony Of the Church. TO give light upon this sweet and sacred subject, there are many large and learned volumes Of our best scholars, but these are too erudite to meet the Simple needs of everyday parochial life. It would seem that a little book which aims, in the simplest way, to gather up the Church' s teaching upon Death, Para dise, the Resurrection and Heaven, might find some useful, though humble, place. Dead-Sea Fruit, Vol. 2 of 3 Hardpress Publishing

Excerpt from The Altar of the Dead HE had a mortal dislike, poor Stransom, to lean anniversaries, and loved them still less when they made a pretence of a figure. Celebrations and suppressions were equally painful to him, and but one of the former found a place in his life. He had kept each year in his own fashion the date of Mary Antrim's death. It would be more to the point perhaps to say that this occasion kept him it kept him at least effectually from doing anything else. It took hold of him again and again with a hand of which time had softened but never loosened the touch. He waked to his feast of memory as consciously as he would have waked to his marriage-morn. Marriage had had of old but too little to say to the matter: for the girl who was to have been his bride there had been no bridal embrace. She had died of a malignant fever after the wedding-day had been fixed, and he had 1081: before fairly tasting it an affection that promised to fill his life to the brim.
