The classic book The Richest Man in

Babylon was written in 1926 by George S. Clason. In the book, he recounts stories of ancient Babylon and the lessons that transformed the city in the wealthiest city in the world. The book contains valuable life lessons and provides the minimum every person should understand about money and the creation of wealth, and really should be required reading at an early age. While the lessons are old indeed, they remain true today as a prescription that can be followed for success. My son requested a revision from the Old English that distracted him from the lessons to Modern English, and this revision is the result. The book is still written in somewhat disjointed fashion that is repetitive at times, uses the ancient names uncommon today, and has too many quotation marks arguably often used incorrectly, because I kept the original nature of the separate writings. I truly believe that these simple rules of finance, investing, and success through hard work should be taught to everybody. Note they are simple, but not always easy to follow. Yet, success will come to those that are disciplined enough to appreciate their value.

They bemoan the time and effort which they used to build up their skills and become one of the best chariot builders and one of the best musicians yet they are still poor. They determine to go ask their childhood friend Arkad for advice, since he has become one of the richest men in Babylon. The Richest Man in Babylon Bansir and Kobbi meet with Arkad, asking him why fate has favored him so much that Arkad (the richest man in Babylon) has grown rich (to the point of becoming the richest man in Babylon) while they remained poor, even though they've worked harder than Arkad has. Arkad (the richest man in Babylon) replies that he was once a hard working scribe who made a deal with a very rich man, Algamish, for the secret to wealth in return for a much needed copy of a law immediately scribed into clay. The rich man agreed and the next day, when Arkad (the richest man in Babylon) delivered the carving, the richest man in Babylon delivered in return the secret of wealth. "I found the road to wealth," he said, "When I decided that a part of all I earned was mine to keep. And so will you." (emphasis in the original) Arkad (the richest man in Babylon) then relates that he asked the same question that is undoubtedly on Bansir and Kobbi's minds, "Isn't all that I make mine to keep?" Arkad (the richest man in Babylon) elates that he did as advised, saving a tenth of his income for a year, then investing that money with a brickmaker who went on a journey to buy jewels to trade. He related this to Algamish, who castigated Arkad (the richest man in Babylon) for this foolishness. "Every fool must learn," he said, Arkad then saved his money for another year, spending it on fine clothing and regularly scheduled feasts. Algamish comments that Arkad is "eating the children of his savings" by not investing them. Arkad saves again and then finally invests his money wisely for two years and when Algamish learns of how Arkad has taken his lessons to heart, he hires Arkad (the richest man in Babylon) as a manager of his estate in Nippur.
