Carmen I. Mercado draws on four decades of seminal research and theory on how American children, who come from homes where languages other than English are spoken, learn to read and to write in school to reveal aspects of locally-responsive planning and adaptations that should be central to any teacher education program that hopes to serve its unique, local population base responsibly. Mercado uses a range of theoretical lenses particularly those surrounding critical theory, the approach designed to deconstruct power relationships in society, to capture and explain the complexities of the teaching-learning process making visible institutional, social and political influences clear. She explores an extensive collection of tools and resources for teaching to explore how educators can inform their thinking and shape their own practices to broaden access to people and resources, and to influence classroom instruction as school populations becomes increasingly diverse on a global scale through immigration. Mercado also shows how self-study has been a key aspect of her program's evolution, suggesting that teacher education should be informed by teacher educators' own investigations into their own programs and processes; that each teacher educator ought to be an active reinventor of her own program, based on reflection on current data. Mercado sensitively draws together the technical and emotional dimensions of learning to teach, acknowledging that critical theory can bring up deep, often uncomfortable feelings of anger, guilt, resentment, and other responses to unfair conditions. However, since schools are designed as places of opportunity, facing these responses is essential at a time with the feelings of antagonism that characterize the present-day world and its conflictual social groups. Mercado offers the opportunity to address these facets of educational process in compelling, informed ways.

The teacher's role is to create opportunities that intrinsically motivate children to externalize their thoughts. Human beings have multiple means of expression: this is powerful when children have the opportunity to have a real voice. The realities of children's experiences in their local communities are powerful resources for the language curriculum and help to create an understanding of the value the languages and cultures of children and teachers bring from a multicultural perspective. Thus, teachers can help children develop their cultural and linguistic identities to promote multiculturalism, multilingualism, and translanguaging so they can thrive in a complex and changing world. The Handbook of Research on Socio-Cultural and Linguistic Perspectives on Language and Literacy Development approaches language and literacy development from a socio-cultural and linguistic perspective. This book offers global perspectives on language and literacy from international experts working with both children and educators. It offers readers a diversity of voices and experiences of professionals in the field that can inform their teaching and research. Covering topics such as critical literacy, emotional engagement, and multilingual resources, this major reference work is an indispensable resource for administrators and educators of both K-12 and higher education, pre-service teachers, teacher educators, biblio-therapists, librarians, researchers, and academicians.

A Report of the ... Annual Conference and Course on Reading Longman

The purpose of this case study is to shed light on the experiences and perceptions of developmental faculty about teaching integrated developmental reading and writing (INRW) at an urban community college in Texas. This study drew primarily from semi-structured interviews with 7 INRW faculty and 2 administrators at Adelante College as well as archival research. This study used Cultural Historical Activity Theory (CHAT) which accounted for how both tangible and intangible items such as the course syllabus and institutional rules interacted in the faculty experience of responding to INRW. The framework lent itself to generating new knowledge about the experiences of college faculty who teach these INRW courses, the teaching of literacy at the college level, how faculty make sense of the state-wide policy changes and remediation in general. INRW directly impacted faculty in multiple ways, including the courses they teach, how they teach them, and if they are even qualified to teach. This study has aimed to situate experiences of faculty who are implementing a state-level policy within the historical, national, and social contexts that have shaped reforms related to that policy. While more standardized reform efforts at the state, national, and global levels can guide action on individual campuses and help researchers and practitioners identify promising interventions, institutions and individuals have to find ways to adapt these actions to the own contexts--that are historically and culturally situated. This study helps identify promising strategies or to mitigate challenges for others who are undergoing similar changes on other campuses.
