Humour, Face and Im/politeness in Getting Acquainted

Face And Im
 Politeness This chapter surveys the concept of face and the derivative term 'facework' as used in the field of (Im)politeness studies. It begins with a historical account: how it was originally conceptualised as a property of the self in interaction, then given a central role in one theory of politeness (that of Brown and Levinson) and subsequently reconceptualised as worthy of study in its own right. Face and (Im)politeness | SpringerLink

In 1987 Brown and Levinson created the most popular and well received approach to politeness. They use the term "face" in conjunction with politeness when delivering messages as a universal skill people used daily. They used Goffman's 1967 view on "face" to formulate their politeness theory. Politeness Theory - com563.ua.edu Politeness theory relies, in part, on the idea that there are different kinds of face: positive face and negative face. Positive face reflects an individual's need for his or her wishes and desires to be appreciated in a social context. This is the maintenance of a positive and consistent self-image.
